Preface

This book is the outgrowth of many years’ thinking and research. I have long contemplated to undertake a comprehensive study on the Korean question in the United Nations, which has exerted an important influence on the world organization as well as on inter-Korean relations. The genesis of the work goes back to my association as a senior fellow with the Institute of Foreign Affairs and National Security (IFANS), the research arm of South Korea’s Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade, in 1977. There I had the opportunities to observe South Korea’s foreign policy and North Korean problems for almost three years, which helped gain an insight into the process of Korea’s foreign policy.

This book entitled “Korea and the United Nations” is the first systematic and in-depth study on the Korean question in the United Nations, which shows the essence of the conflict between South and North Korea at the international level. It attempts a comprehensive analysis of the political and legal issues of the Korean question in the United Nations, which have been raised during the past fifty years. The book covers not only the much discussed issues during the Cold War but also the recent problems of North Korea’s nuclear program and refugees in the post-Cold War era.

The research for this study has been carried out mainly at the IFANS Library and the Columbia University International Law Library. I have consulted numerous books, scholarly articles, memoirs, monographs, government publications and declassified diplomatic documents. I am deeply indebted to Professor Gerard J. Mangone, University Research Professor for International and Maritime Law at the University of Delaware, who kindly read and commented on the manuscript, and offered much invaluable editorial advice which helped improve the quality of the manuscript. He encouraged me to publish this book even before the manuscript was completed. Without his support, the publication of this book would not have been possible.

I also owe a debt of gratitude to the following individuals who have read parts of the manuscript and made many useful comments: Dr. Park Keun, former South Korean Ambassador to the United Nations, and Dr. Park Sang-seek, former Chancellor of IFANS and Ambassador to Singapore. I am also grateful to Ambassador Suh Dae-won, Deputy Permanent Representative of the Republic of Korea to the United Nations for his interview in June 1999 on South and North Korea’s participation in the UN activities, and Mr. Lee Byong-hyun, Director of the United Nations Division, Policy Planning Office, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade for allowing me to use some of his useful research materials. Needless to say, I am alone responsible for any error in facts and judgments.

There have been many scholars who made a profound influence on my academic thinking in international law and organization. In particular, the names of four great professors should be mentioned – the late Professors Leland M. Goodrich and Philip C. Jessup of Columbia University, the late Thomas Hovet, Jr. of the University of Oregon, and Professor Thomas M. Franck of New York University, under whom I had studied as a graduate student in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Their vision and philosophy helped me to comprehend the importance of order and justice through law and cooperation for human survival in the increasingly interdependent world of nations. If this work could make any contribution to the promotion of world order and justice in a small way, it would be a tribute to them.

Finally, I wish to thank Dr. Shin Hyeon-joong of Hanso University for his suggestions, and Suh Young-jin and Kim Hyun-sook, both graduate students at Hanyang University, for their assistance in preparing many drafts of this book.
