ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many people have contributed in various ways to this book. I would like to thank Jeffrey Mehlman, whose erudition and creativity are a constant inspiration, for his interest in this project and his continued mentorship. Gratitude is also due Roger Shattuck, Jeff Kline, Susan Jackson and Beth Goldsmith for their comments and ideas on earlier versions of the manuscript. A special thanks goes to Joe Breines, for hours of discussion of various aspects of Paul Morand’s work, and to Simon Heck for his unflagging, at times long-distance, intellectual and personal support.

Many of my colleagues and friends here at the University of Texas at Arlington and elsewhere have provided important feedback, ideas, wonderful conversations and editorial aid: Chris Conway of Brown University; Toni Sol, Ruth Gross, Aimée Israël-Pelletier and Denis Bettaver, here at UTA; Sonja Kropp-Dams of University of Nebraska-Kearney and Marshall Olds of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. Many thanks also to Scott Williams, Dennis Tsurkan and Nellainayagam Subramaniam for their technical expertise.

I am also very grateful for the help of Christa Stevens, my editor at Rodopi, for her eagle eye and her always pertinent suggestions.

Grateful acknowledgement is also made to the Humanities Foundation at Boston University for a grant enabling me to attend the Edouard Morot-Sir Institute on Memory and History, and to the Department of Modern Languages, the Dean’s Office and the Graduate School at the University of Texas at Arlington for ongoing support of the presentation of portions of this work in various venues.

I can only attempt to thank those people who inspire and sustain me in so many other ways and who have made this book concretely possible: my parents, Howard and Carole Philpot; my brother Scott; Peter, for his endless support; and Hilary and Nathan, for keeping things constantly in perspective.

Finally, I would like to dedicate this book to my mother, for making my dream a reality, and to Etty Horowitz, whose successful fight for life informed the final stages of this book.