ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The merits of this book are owed to the intelligent guidance generously shared with me by many people. I am grateful to my colleagues at the State University of New York at Buffalo and at Oklahoma State University for many constructive discussions during the early stages of formulating my ideas into a coherent work. Michael Gorr provided me with a detailed review of an earlier draft, and whatever faults this book contains are undoubtedly due to my not accommodating his suggestions. Having read a vast amount of literature on coercion, I found Gorr's account to be heads above the rest. His writing remains an exemplar of philosophical clarity and precision and serves as a benchmark of excellence in my scholarly endeavors.

I lack an adequately rich vocabulary and eloquence of prose to fully convey my gratitude to Richard Hull. From the original conception of this book to its final stage of production, he has been my primary source of guidance, criticism, and motivation. This book simply would not exist were it not for Richard Hull.

A substantial amount of labor other than mine was invested in this book. Judy Wagner and Murry Hodgson had to endure many hectic and stressful moments associated with the production of the original manuscript. They not only performed with excellence but remarkably held no grudges. Finally, I am grateful to Gwen A. Burda for applying her keen editorial eye to the final version of the manuscript and for her splendid work done in preparing the camera-ready version, including the index.

Michael R. Rhodes