ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I OWE A DEBT OF GRATITUDE to numerous individuals and institutions for their help in the preparation of this work. Without the cooperation and help of Hindi-speaking intellectuals, whose values and beliefs have been summed up in the forthcoming pages, I would not have been able to complete this volume. I am especially indebted to them for their candid comments, extraordinary openness, and willingness to spend their valuable time with me. While the Indian Council of Social Science Research provided me the financial assistance enabling me to conduct field work in India, Dean Robert Oetjen and Professor Paul Weidner, the former Chairman of Department of Political Science at the University of Akron enabled me to take the time off from teaching. Professors Yashdev Shalya, S. M. Sood, Roshan Khosla, Dr. Prabhakar Machwe, then Secretary of Sahitya Akademia, Dr. Shyam Parmer, Dr. M. L. Narchar, Professor Brij Mohan Gupta, Vijay Chaudhary, Dr. Ved Prakash Vaidik, and K. C. Suman provided me with very valuable help in conducting the field work. My elder brother, Dev Raj, went beyond the call of his duty in facilitating my field work by putting me in touch with the eminent intellectuals of New Delhi.

From among the numerous creative authors who I met, I would especially like to mention Rajendra Yadav, G. K. Mathur, S. K. Divya, and the late Mrs. Rajni Pannikar for their hospitality. Also, to my several research assistants who helped me to complete this project Norm Graham and Elizabeth Buffum provided valuable help in the preparation of the bibliography, Saundra K. Schneider tirelessly worked to process the data, and Michael Marzick and Lloyd Bokman read the various drafts of the manuscript. Mrs. Julie Piper and Mrs. Bonnie Ralston, the secretaries of the department, and their assistant Miss Linda Foley, showed remarkable patience in typing the different versions of the manuscript. This enterprise also benefited from the advice of many colleagues and friends. Carl Lieberman of the University of Akron has always been generous with his time and provided valuable help. Professor Paul Wallace, of the University of Missouri at Columbia, made very useful comments on the original research project. Professors Ramashray Roy, Center for the Study of Developing Societies, Delhi, and A. H. Somjee, Associate Fellow, Oxford University, read the manuscript and made very valuable suggestions for its revision. Professor K. Ishwaran, the editor of the series, showed a keen interest in the manuscript and provided valuable editorial advice. I express my thanks to all these individuals and institutions for their valuable help.

I am especially grateful to Professors Avery Leiserson and S. N. Eisenstadt for writing the forward and introduction to this work. Their comments have been a great source of encouragement.

Some portions of the chapters three and four have appeared in Asian Studies and Asian Survey as articles. I am grateful to their editors for their permission to let me include the material in this volume.

Finally, I would like to express my deep gratitude to my wife, Usha, and our children, who not only shared the excitement of field work with me, but also showed remarkable patience and forebearance when I was busy in writing, allowing me to devote undivided attention to the completion of this work. For all my appreciation to those who helped me in this project, however, I alone bear the responsibility for the material presented here.

The University of Akron

YOGENDRA K. MALIK