ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I have been most privileged to work with exceptional faculty who first inspired my scholarly imagination and then set about the more difficult task of directing that imagination toward disciplined thought and articulate expression. Preeminent among them stands Susan R. Garret, who first encouraged me to consider advanced work in New Testament. Wayne Meeks has been a steady presence from my first Greek exegesis course in seminary until now, as I serve as a faculty member at Perkins School of Theology. As both teacher and friend he has generously shared his time and counsel. I first met Lou Martyn in a Galatians course at Yake Divinity School; he has influenced my scholarship in diverse ways. I thank David Bartlett, whose contributions to my life and work are hard to categorize. At one point or another over the past ten years he has served as my professor, my fellow American Baptist minister, my boss, my pastor, and now my colleague. Through it all he has been a friend. Dale Martin and Harold Attridge were kind enough to read and comment on the manuscript. I thank Daniel Boyarin for his interest in and encouragement of the project.

Nancy Ammerman’s expertise as a sociologist of religion permeates this project. By directing me to literature in various subfields of sociology, she enabled me to find a language useful for asking the particular questions I wanted to ask of the Fourth Gospel and useful for venturing possible answers. I have learned much from Stephen Fraade and Victor Bers and appreciate their continued willingness to serve as resources whenever my research takes me into their fields.

Thanks to Perkins School of Theology for providing a wonderful work atmosphere and support for research assistance in preparing this manuscript. David Watson, Jeremy Bakker, and Lee Jefferson provided valuable assistance. I thank my editors, Patrick Alexander and Renee Ricker, for their impressive expertise and patient help through the publication process.

My most profound gratitude goes to my family. My husband, Thad Clark-Soles, has helped me to carve out a life in which I “have it all,” including our wonderful children, Chloe and Caleb. I hope to lend them the same faith and support that I have enjoyed from my mother- and father-in-law, Caroline and Lewis Soles, and my parents, Margot and Harold Clark.
