ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I have acquired many debts in the course of bringing this project to fruition, and I am happy to acknowledge them here. My thanks must go first to Robert Louis Wilken who supervised the dissertation out of which this book grew and urged me to revise it for publication. His wisdom, keen insight, and encouragement have been invaluable. My appreciation extends to the other readers of the dissertation, Gary Anderson, Harry Gamble, and Mark Morford, each of whom made important suggestions for improvement.

I count myself fortunate to be a part of the Theology Department at Loyola College in Maryland: my colleagues bring an infectious enthusiasm to the enterprise of theology, and it is a privilege to work with them. I am especially grateful to Jim Buckley who, initially as department chair and more recently as Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, has been steadfast in his support. Special thanks also go to Fritz Baurerschmidt, Steve Fowl, and Claire Mathews-McGinnis. The Office of the Academic Vice-President and the Center for the Humanities at Loyola provided assistance in the form of a Summer Research Grant and a Junior Faculty Sabbatical. The staffs of the Loyola/Notre Dame Library, the Knott Library at St. Mary’s Seminary and University, and the Bishop Payne Library at Virginia Theological Seminary were unfailingly helpful.

Fred Norris and Paul Blowers read the entire manuscript at various stages, and it benefited greatly from their suggestions. Robin Darling Young offered much-needed encouragement at several critical points. Jeffrey Bingham, editor of The Bible in Ancient Christianity, and the editorial staff of Brill Academic Publishers, especially Wilma de Weert, Loes Schouten, Ivo Romein, and Patrick Alexander, have shepherded my manuscript through the publication process with skill and patience. Corry O’Neill prepared the indices with his usual diligence and care.

Finally, I thank my parents, Gene and Carolyn Russell, and my mother-in-law, Katherine Christman, for their support. My only regret with the publication of this book is that my father-in-law, Jack Christman, did not live to see it. He would have loved to have held it in his hands and perused its pages. My greatest debt is to my husband, Tom, and our daughters, Sidney Marie and Cecilia. I dedicate this book to them as a token of my love and devotion.
