ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This work began as a doctoral research project at the University of Manitoba, when my supervisor Henry Heller suggested that I take a look at Guillaume Postel. I soon discovered that Postel was a natural focal point for my rather disparate range of interests: the history of early modern France, the Reformation, Jewish-Christian relations, mysticism, Kabbalah and gender issues. I owe a great debt of gratitude to Henry Heller, whose suggestion initiated this project and whose continued support, encouragement and advice helped me see it to completion. Dr. John Wortley and Dr. Lionel Steiman of the History Department at the University of Manitoba were both mentors and friends, as was Dr. John Kleiner at the Lutheran Theological Seminary in Saskatoon; his courses introduced me to the history of Jewish-Christian relations.

The research for this work was undertaken primarily at the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris and would not have been possible without the generous financial assistance of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada. Doctoral funding was also provided by the University of Manitoba. Subsequent research has been funded by Luther College at the University of Regina. Luther College has provided a warm, supportive environment and I wish to acknowledge especially Bryan Hillis and William Stahl for their continued encouragement of my research. I would also like to thank Andrew Gow at the University of Alberta and Alison Duncan in Edinburgh for their kind assistance in the latter stages of editing the manuscript. My family has always provided a naturally supportive and scholarly environment. Finally, I must thank my husband, Gary Diver, for his encouragement, patience and the lively intellectual environment he creates for me in our home.

Regina, Saskatchewan, Canada
October, 2003