Contributors

Ramón Aizpurua studied history in Caracas and Barcelona and was full professor in colonial history at the Universidad Central de Venezuela until his retirement. His most recent books are En busca de la libertad: la fuga de esclavos holandeses a la Provincia de Venezuela en el siglo XVIII (Bogotá, 2002) and La conspiración por dentro: un análisis de las declaraciones de la Conspiración de La Guaira de 1797 (Caracas, 2007).

Karwan Fatah-Black is a PhD candidate at the Institute for History of Leiden University. As a member of the project 'Dutch Atlantic Connections: The Circulation of People, Goods and Ideas, 1670-1800', he studies the role of Paramaribo as a node in the Dutch circuit of Atlantic trade. He graduated as a research master in history at the University of Amsterdam with a thesis on the political movements on Curaçao during the Age of Revolutions.

David Geggus was educated at Oxford, London, and York Universities in England. He has been professor of history at the University of Florida, Gainesville, since 1983. His research interests include Caribbean slavery, the Atlantic slave trade and the Haitian Revolution. His most recent books include Haitian revolutionary studies (2002) and (with Norman Fiering) The world of the Haitian Revolution (2009).

Han Jordaán studied history at Leiden University and fine arts at the Royal Academy of Art in The Hague. Between 2004 and 2006 he coordinated the project 'The Atlantic World and the Dutch, 1500-2000' (AWAD). As a researcher at the KITLV and the Huygens Institute of Netherlands History in The Hague, he completed his dissertation on the free black and coloured population in eighteenth-century Curaçao in 2011. He has published various articles on slavery and race relations in Curaçao.

Wim Klooster is associate professor at Clark University, Worcester, Massachusetts, USA, where he has taught since 2003. He earned his PhD at the University of Leiden in 1995 and has been the Inter-Americas Mellon Fellow at the John Carter Brown Library and a Charles Warren Fellow at Harvard University. Among his research interests are Atlantic trade, especially smuggling, the Dutch Atlantic, and the age of revolutions. He has published seven other books, including Revolutions in the Atlantic world: A comparative history (2009) and Illicit riches: Dutch trade in the Caribbean, 1648-1795 (1998).

Gert Oostindie is director of the KITLV/Royal Netherlands Institute of Southeast Asian and Caribbean Studies in Leiden and professor of Caribbean history at Leiden University. His recent books include Postcolonial Netherlands: Sixty-five years of forgetting, commemorating, silencing (2011), Dutch colonialism, migration and cultural heritage (ed., 2008), and Paradise overseas: The Dutch Caribbean - colonialism and its transatlantic legacies (2005).

Linda M. Rupert is assistant professor, Atlantic World, at University of North Carolina, Greensboro. She holds a PhD from Duke University (history, 2006). Her publications include 'Marronage, manumission, and maritime trade in the early modern Caribbean' (Slavery & Abolition 2009) and 'Contraband trade and the shaping of colonial societies' (Itinerario 2006). She was a visiting Fulbright Scholar at KITLV in fall 2009.