About the authors

Greg Bankoff is a social and environmental historian of Southeast Asia and the Pacific. In particular, he writes on environment-society interactions with respect to natural hazards, resources, human-animal relations and issues of social equity and labour. He is an associate professor at the School of Asian Studies, University of Auckland and a visiting professor of Disaster Management, Coventry University. Among his publications are Crime, society and the state in the nineteenth-century Philippines (1996) and Cultures of disaster; Society and natural hazard in the Philippines (2003).

Franz von Benda-Beckmann is head of the project group for Legal Pluralism at the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology in Halle, Germany, and an honorary professor at the universities of Leipzig and Halle. He holds a PhD in law (Kiel 1970) and a Habilitation in anthropology (Zürich 1979). Among his publications are (with K. von Benda-Beckmann and A. Griffiths (eds)) Mobile people, mobile law; Expanding legal relations in a contracting world (2005) and (with K. von Benda-Beckmann and M. Wiber (eds)) The properties of property (2006).

Peter Boomgaard was trained as an economic and social historian and obtained his PhD from the Vrije Universiteit, Amsterdam, in 1987. He is senior researcher at KITLV, Leiden, and professor of environmental history of Southeast Asia at the University of Amsterdam. Among his publications are Frontiers of fear; Tigers and people in the Malay world, 1600-1950 (2001), and Southeast Asia; An environmental history (2006).

Okke Braadbaart has Masters degrees in economic anthropology and languages and cultures of the Middle East, and a PhD in social sciences (Radboud University Nijmegen, 1994). He heads the Urban Environment Group in the Landscape Centre at Wageningen University and Research Centre. He co-authored Private business, public owners; Government shareholdings in water enterprises (1999) and published Privatizing water and wastewater in developing countries; The 1990s 'experience' in water policy (2005).

Jan Wisseman Christie received her BA in South Asian languages and history from the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, and her PhD in Southeast Asian history and archaeology from the School of Oriental and African Studies, London. Until her retirement in 2004, she was a member of the Centre for South-East Asian Studies at the University of Hull, U.K. Among her publications are 'Asian sea trade between the tenth and thirteenth centuries and its impact on the states of Java and Bali' (1999) and 'Revisiting Mataram' (2001). In preparation is a register of the inscriptions of Java from AD 732 to 1060.

Arief Djati is a researcher at the AREK Foundation, Surabaya. He obtained his BA degree from the University of Airlangga, Surabaya; he is a writer and an editor. He has authored Profil buruh anak di Surabaya and is co-author of The dog is dead, so throw it in the river.

Foong Kin was trained as a physician with emphasis on epidemiology and psychosocial research. She has published on topics such as malaria and the consumption of tobacco and alcohol. She is Profesor Madya at the National Poison Centre, Universiti Sains Malaysia. Among her publications is Social and behavioral aspects of malaria control; A study among the Murut of Sabah (2000).

Robert C. Hunt was trained as a social and economic anthropologist and obtained his PhD from Northwestern University in 1965. He retired from his position as a professor of anthropology at Brandeis University and now holds a Mellon Foundation Emeritus Fellowship. Among his publications are Property in economic context (1998) and Beyond relativism; Rethinking comparability in cultural anthropology (2007).

Anton Lucas obtained his PhD in Southeast Asian history from the Australian National University in 1981. He is an associate professor of Asian studies and Indonesian and director of the Flinders Asia Centre at Flinders University of South Australia. His publications include (with Dianto Bachriadi) Merampas tanah rakyat; Kasus Tapos dan Cimacan (2001), and (with Carol Warren) 'The state, the people and their mediators; The struggle over agrarian reform in post-New Order Indonesia', Indonesia 76 (2003).

Manon Osseweijer was trained as an anthropologist and obtained her PhD from Leiden University in 2001. She is coordinator of academic affairs at the International Institute for Asian Studies (IIAS), in Leiden. From 1999-2004 she was a post-doctoral researcher in the KITLV programme Ecology, Demography and Economy in Nusantara (EDEN). Among her publications are 'Conflicting boundaries; The role of mapping in the co-management discourse' (in: Gerard A. Persoon, Diny M.E. van Est and Percy E. Sajise, Co-management of natural resources in Asia; A comparative perspective (2003)) and 'The future lies in the sea; Fisheries development programmes in island Riau' (in: Peter Boomgaard, David Henley and Manon Osseweijer, Muddied waters; Historical and contemporary perspectives on management of forests and fisheries in island Southeast Asia (2005)).

Sandra Pannell was trained as an anthropologist and has worked as a consultant and university lecturer. She is currently programme coordinator of a rain-forest research project at the James Cook University, Queensland, Australia. Among her publications are Old World places, New World problems; Exploring images of resource management in eastern Indonesia (1998, editor, together with Franz von Benda-Beckmann), and A state of emergency; Violence, society, and the state in eastern Indonesia (2003, editor).

Heather Sutherland, professor of non-western history at the Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam, is specialized in the history of Indonesia; she also publishes on Southeast Asian and world historiography. Her current research focusses on social change, ethnicity and trade in Makassar, from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries, an interest reflected in her recent book, written with Gerrit Knaap: Monsoon traders; Ships, skippers and commodities in eighteenth-century Makassar (2004).

James F. Warren is professor of Southeast Asian modern history at Murdoch University in Perth, Western Australia. Among his publications are Ah Ku and Karayuki-san; Prostitution in Singapore 1870-1940 (1993) and Iranun and Balangingi; Globalization, maritime raiding and the birth of ethnicity (2002).

Willem Wolters is professor emeritus of economic anthropology, Radboud University Nijmegen, the Netherlands. He studied social geography, sociology and modern history of Southeast Asia at the University of Amsterdam, and obtained his PhD at the same university. He has done anthropological field-work in the Philippines and Indonesia. Publications include: Politics, patronage and class conflict in Central Luzon (1983) and 'Uneven impact and regional responses; The Philippines in the 1930s depression' (in: Peter Boomgaard and Ian Brown (eds), Weathering the storm; The economics of Southeast Asia in the 1930s depression (Singapore 2000)). He is presently working on the history of money and credit in the Philippines and Indonesia.