ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The publication of this book gives me the opportunity to express my appreciation for the manifold help I have received from various sides.

To Professor Ruedi Imbach (Fribourg) I am very grateful for lending me his microfilms of the two Parisian manuscripts, which considerably facilitated the collation of the Letters on the spot.

My friend Dr. Zénon Kaluza (Paris) has greatly contributed to the completion of the present study, as may be clear from a quick glance at the Index nominum. Without his extensive, penetrating and well-documented study of Autrecourt’s life, career and writings, which he was kind enough to put at my disposal in typescript, a substantial part of my Introduction would have got bogged down in the conventional errors and misunderstandings. He also deserves my gratitude for letting me have the edition of the Articuli condemnati and the acts of the Avignon trial, which he originally intended to edit himself, and for offering me his transcriptions of the manuscripts.

To my wife, Jettie de Wal this book is dedicated. Her subtle and perceptive criticism, especially of the first draft of the translation of the Letters, has been extremely helpful.

Finally, I wish to thank Professor Albert Zimmermann, Director of the Studien und Texte zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters for accepting this book into his prestigious series, and the editor E.J. Brill, and especially Mrs. Gonni Runia-Deenick, for the great care they have expended on the publication.
