ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This volume was conceived as a result of the conference, “Families in the Global Age: New Challenges Facing Japan and Southeast Asia”, organized by the then Centre for Advanced Studies (CAS) at the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences, National University of Singapore. We are delighted to express our gratitude to the people and institutions that supported the conference in October 2000 in Singapore. Without them, we would not have been able to start this book project. We are equally grateful to those who joined the project later and helped bring this volume into being.

Our utmost gratitude goes to Brenda Yeoh, who was the Director of the CAS, for her invaluable support and encouragement. We thank those who organized the conference, including Shirlena Huang, Antonio Rappa, Ngiam Tee Liang, and Catherine Briscoe; they had all contributed greatly to the intellectual success of the conference. We are also grateful for the various modes of assistance provided by the CAS’s support staff. In addition, we thank Japan Foundation and Singapore Pools for their generous financial assistance, which made possible the conference and the preparation of this book manuscript.

The process of bringing this project to fruition has been an unforgettable experience for us. Throughout this process, we have experienced our share of challenges that come with balancing our professional and private lives. Among other milestones, Wei-hsin took up a new post at Academia Sinica in her hometown of Taipei in 2001, while Leng Leng renewed her experience of motherhood with the arrival of her second son, Jaren, in November 2000.

Despite the challenges, the actual process of compiling this volume went rather smoothly, thanks to the editorial board members of the Social Sciences in Asia series, Vineeta Sinha and Syed Farid Alatas, as well as the liaising editor at Brill, Ivo Romein. Their professional commitment to the project has made possible this final product. We also appreciate the constructive comments from the two anonymous readers, which have benefited many of the chapters. We are particularly indebted to them for the thoughtful comments that guided our revision of the introductory chapter. We are also fortunate to have received wonderful help from Verene Koh, Valarie Yeo, Chih-yao Chang and Madona Michael, who have provided editorial and administrative assistance in the production of this volume.

Last, but not least, we thank all the contributors to this volume not only for their intellectual input, but also for their patience in dealing with our unending requests. In addition to their quick response to calls for revisions, the contributors have given us their wholehearted encouragement and invaluable friendship throughout the process. In particular, we would like to express our gratitude to the contributors who joined us after the conference. They have helped us widen the scope of this volume, and better represent different parts of Asia. On the whole, we feel fortunate to have had the opportunity of working with this group of brilliant scholars in presenting women’s family and working lives in Asia. Without their intellectual insights, this volume would not have been possible.
