ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This collection has an illustrious genealogy and a motley series of origins. A subset of the chapters included here was first presented as papers at a session organized by Hylton White at the American Anthropological Association meetings. The papers were subsequently published in a special issue of the Journal of Religion in Africa (JRA; vol. xxxi–4) entitled ‘Mal-Adjustments: Ritual and Reproduction in Neo-Liberal Africa.’ The majority of the remaining papers were presented at a small conference on ‘Neo-Liberalism and the Politics of Social Reproduction in Africa’ convened in December 2000 by the Committee on African and African-American Studies at the University of Chicago—whence the genealogy for this series of conferences has produced both Modernity and its Malcontents (Comaroff and Comaroff 1993) and Civil Society and the Political Imagination in Africa (Comaroff and Comaroff 2000). The work of the Committee on African and African-American Studies has been faithfully supported over the years by the administration of Division of the Social Sciences at the University of Chicago, especially by John Boyer, Dean of the College. It has been my good fortune to work with the many participants in the African Studies Workshop at Chicago for almost twenty years now, and editing this collection affords me the opportunity to express my thanks to all of them for the invaluable collegiality and commitment they have provided. All of the contributors appreciate the continuing support that the University of Chicago College has given to the African Studies Workshop.

I am especially grateful to John and Jean Comaroff, most immediately for entrusting me with the editorship of this collection and more generally for their unrelenting guidance and support. Their expert editorial skills are largely responsible for shaping these papers into their current form; I am happy to be standing squarely on their shoulders (and hope the burden isn’t too heavy). Jean further provided me with incisive and timely comments on the introduction and offered steady encouragement.

It has been a pleasure to work with David Maxwell and Ingrid Lawrie at the JRA. It was their support for the original special issue that made this expanded collection possible. They have both provided timely commentary and enthusiasm in their advocacy for much of this work. I must also thank Joed Elich at Brill for his support both of the original issue of the JRA and for his suggestion that we expand it into the current collection. Beth Anne Buggenhagen did a wonderful job of organizing the December 2000 conference at the Wilder House in Chicago. Nancy Rose Hunt provided a number of helpful insights in her comments at the Workshop conference. I also want to thank Ken Wissoker for his help at especially crucial moments. Christine Dahlin has been an invaluable copyeditor.

Lots of far-flung institutions have provided support for this work. The departments of anthropology at the University of Chicago and the College of William & Mary, as well as the Reves Center for International Studies at the College of William & Mary, have helped offset some last-minute production costs. Lastly, a grant from the American Council of Learned Societies to spend the year at the National Humanities Center has given me the time to manage my editorial duties.
