Notes on Contributors

Faala Sam Amosa
is a Senior Lecturer in Sociology at the National University of Samoa. His doctoral thesis on the ‘shaking of the foundations’ of Samoan society is one of the first three pieces of research into a public theology in this context. He has published a number of articles on the relationship of theology to the Samoan way of life (fa’aSamoa), the church and the Constitution.

Chammah Kaunda
PhD is a Zambian scholar currently working as an Assistant Professor at the United Graduate School of Theology, Yonsei University, Korean Republic. He is also an Extraordinary Professor in the Department of Religion and Theology at the University of the Western Cape, South Africa, and Research Associate at the Cambridge Centre for Christianity Worldwide (CCCW).

Jason Lam
is currently Senior Lecturer in Christian Thoughts at Melbourne School of Theology and Senior Research Fellow of Australian College of Theology. He reads hermeneutics and modern theology. His recent books include Sino-Christian Theology: A Theological qua Cultural Movement in Contemporary China (editor) and Being, History, Sacred: A Reflection on the Sino Theologico-Political Discourses (in Chinese).

Chang-Ho Lee
is an associate professor of Christianity and Culture at Presbyterian University and Theological Seminary (PUTS), having earned degrees from Yale University (S.T.M., Ph.D.), Yonsei University (Th.M.), and Presbyterian University and Theological Seminary (Th.B., M.Div.). He is the author of The Ethics of Love (2020), Theological Ethics (2021), and A Theory of Christian Public Relations (2022), all published by PUTS Press.
Kevin Muriithi Ndereba
(PhD, University of South Africa) is Lecturer and Head of Department of Practical Theology at St. Paul's University, Nairobi, Kenya. He is also a Research Fellow in the Department of Practical Theology and Missiology at Stellenbosch University. He researches and has multiple publications on youth ministry, practical, pastoral and public theologies, apologetics, as well as the intersection of faith and science. He is an executive member of the Africa Society of Evangelical Theology (ASET) and the International Association for the Study of Youth Ministry (IASYM).

Erik Olsman
PhD is associate professor of spiritual care and chaplaincy studies (Protestant Theological University, The Netherlands) and ethicist in a review committee on euthanasia (The Netherlands Department of Health Care). Previously, he worked as chaplain in mental health care and palliative care and as assistant professor of medical ethics at academic hospitals.

Thijs Oosterhuis, MA
is military chaplain and is doing a PhD research on the theological underpinning of the contribution of military chaplains to the moral formation of military leaders. Previously he was attached as chaplain to the Royal Naval Academy in Den Helder, where he was involved in moral formation of midshipmen. As chaplain for the Royal Netherlands navy he has also been deployed in various military missions.

Pieter Vos
PhD is Professor of Military Chaplaincy Studies and Associate Professor of Ethics (Protestant Theological University, The Netherlands). He is also Director of the International Reformed Theological Institute and Editor-in-Chief of Journal of Reformed Theology. Previously he held the chair of Moral Formation in Education at VIAA, University of Applied Sciences in Zwolle.

Ruth Wivell is a post-graduate student at the University of Otago, Aotearoa-New Zealand. She is in formation for ministry in the Diocese of Auckland at St John's Theological College.