The Civil & Military Gazette Online, 1876-1963

The Civil & Military Gazette constitutes one of the most significant drivers of power in the long empire of information connecting, informing and controlling British India. Published in Simla and Lahore, The Civil & Military Gazette stands as an unrivalled media institution offering scholars of imperialism and South Asia area studies extraordinary broad perspectives from both sides of what would become the divided Raj.

Like its predecessor, The Mofussilite, The Civil & Military Gazette demonstrates a strong tradition of cultivating and publishing literary talent, most notably the young Rudyard Kipling (1865-1936) who published his first collection of verse and his first short stories both in the Gazette and in its imprint, the Civil and Military Press. The duration of this unparalleled source took its considerable readership on a deep daily dive into the heart of the Raj, the chaos of Partition, and into post-Partition South Asia. The Civil & Military Gazette is the newspaper of record for the Raj and after, an essential source for scholars of South Asia and media historians alike.

Until recently it was impossible for sociologists, anthropologists, historians of attitudes and social psychologists to develop the study of religion in modern Latin America into a field of teaching and research. The documents pertaining to the colonial period are, of course, preserved and often well edited. But the publications of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries that deal with local devotions and syncretist rituals, religious iconography and poetry, and the pastoral campaigns of the various churches and sects, remained unnoticed until the early 1960s, when Ivan Illich began to collect them in the CIDOC Library of Cuernavaca, Mexico. Under the care of Valentina Borremans the collection grew, and is still growing vigorously after having become part of El Colegio de México. Reproduced from a wide range of libraries throughout Mexico, Venezuela, Brazil, Argentina and Chile, this vast and invaluable collection is now available in fully searchable digital format for the first time.

This collection was scanned from microform (48,000 microfiches and 12 reels).
Brill's Encyclopedia of Critical Understanding in Education Online is a fully searchable and hyperlinked database, containing all volumes published in our book series Critical Understanding in Education. It provides historical developments and current issues present in various disciplines related to critical thinking and understanding in Educational Research. As the field of education is multidisciplinary and broad in scope, its relevancy stretches far beyond Education itself. Educational researchers share interests and methods with the social, language, economic and STEM sciences. The range of topics this encyclopedia covers therefore reflects its multidisciplinary nature.

This encyclopedia fills the demand for a foundational reference work in the Educational Research market on Critical Theory, Critical Thinking, and Critical Understanding in Education. Curated by seasoned series editors, every existing and forthcoming volume has contributions from global top-researchers in their respective specialties.

Ultimately, Brill's Encyclopedia of Critical Understanding in Education Online aims to fuel conversations between established and future scholars, demonstrate the accumulation of critical knowledge, provide a platform for critical understanding, and open up possibilities for influencing (international) praxis.

The Encyclopedia of Queer Studies in Education was awarded Choice's Outstanding Academic Title 2022.

The Encyclopedia of Critical Understandings of Latinx and Global Education was awarded the 2022 AESA Critics' Choice Book Award.
