The Social Sciences at Brill

The Social Sciences at Brill are central to our mission of publishing superior scholarship that addresses the complex needs and struggles of the ever-changing political and cultural landscape of a globalized world.

Anchored in well-established critical and comparative publications, the Social Sciences at Brill are experiencing dynamic expansion and diversification by reason of our three core principles for achieving enduring growth in ways that are uniquely relevant to the 21st century: 1) social responsiveness; 2) multi-/inter-/transdisciplinarity; and 3) innovation and revitalization. In recent years, we have launched book series, journals, reference works, and online primary source collections in political studies, global studies, political and public anthropology, religious studies, media studies, youth studies, emotion studies, and numerous similar explorations within various fields of area studies at Brill, with a special emphasis on the Global South. Moreover, Brill acquired Sense Publishers in 2017, and Brill | Sense remains one of the fastest-growing publishers of books in educational research and related fields.

As we continue to seek new opportunities in the aforementioned subject areas, special attention will be given in future to increasing our offerings in political science, economics, gender studies, urban studies, contemporary migration studies, communication studies, and innovation, development, and technology studies. The Social Sciences at Brill are deeply committed to the advancement of scholarship that fosters discovery and dialog informed by the values of accuracy, transparency, and inclusion. We encourage you to join with Brill and our family of authors and editors in the effort to advance discovery and learning through scholarly excellence.
