Shared Water Resources in West Africa

Relevance and Application of the UN Watercourses and the UNECE Water Conventions

Author: Nwamaka Chigozie Odili

This work, Shared Water Resources in West Africa: Relevance and Application of the UN Watercourses and UNECE Water Conventions, addresses the question of whether riparian states in West Africa need to be parties to both the UN Watercourses Convention and the UNECE Water Convention, both of which have influenced current water regimes in the region. The initial transboundary water instruments in the region dealt primarily with navigation, later agreements addressed the need for cooperation, while recent regimes incorporate other principles of international water law articulated in the UN water treaties. Although only six out of its numerous shared watercourses are currently regulated by legal instruments, West Africa contributed through these agreements to the development of international water prior to the adoption of the UN Watercourses and the UNECE Water Conventions in the 1990s.

Readership

This work will interest those who study transboundary water law and institutions that offer such course of study. It will be of particular interest to those who wish to research West African transboundary water regimes.
