AUTHORS’ BIOGRAPHIES

PHILIP ALCABES is an infectious-disease epidemiologist, currently Associate Professor of Urban Public Health at Hunter College, City University of New York. He also holds an appointment as Visiting Clinical Associate Professor at the Yale School of Nursing. Alcabes’s epidemiologic research has covered hepatitis, AIDS, tuberculosis, and other infections of outbreak potential, as well as social aspects of contagion. His most recent work has examined political and ethical forces in public health. He is writing a book on the history of thought about epidemics, to be published in 2009.

CHRIS J. BOYATZIS is Professor of Psychology at Bucknell University. His major interests are in religious/spiritual development in childhood through emerging adulthood and the role of religiosity in well-being, especially women’s body image and eating behavior. Boyatzis has organized and edited three special issues on religious and spiritual development, has authored chapters on religious development in major handbooks, and organizes a conference on religious and spiritual development at the biennial meetings of the Society for Research in Child Development.

ROBERT J. CRAMER is a doctoral student in Clinical-Forensic Psychology at the University of Alabama where he received his M.A. in May, 2006. His areas of research interest include the Five-Factor Model of personality, jury decision making, and LGB issues. He attained his Bachelor’s degree at Loyola College in Maryland and currently works in the Witness Research Lab at the University of Alabama under the direction of Stanley L. Brodsky, Ph.D.

ALETHEA DESROSIEERS is currently a doctoral candidate in Clinical Psychology at Teachers College, Columbia University. She received her masters degree in psychology from Teachers College in 2007. Her primary research interests are spirituality and psychopathology in adolescents and spiritual development throughout the lifespan.

LESLIE J. FRANCIS is Professor of Practical Theology at the University of Wales, Bangor, United Kingdom. He received his Ph.D. and Sc.D. from the University of Cambridge, and his D.D. from the University of Oxford. He is an Anglican priest and Fellow of the British Psychological Society. His recent books include The Naked Parish Priest: What priests really think they are doing (2003), Faith and Psychology: Personality, religion and the individual (2005), British Methodism: What circuit ministers really think (2006).

MICHAEL P. GRIFFIN, Ph.D. received his M.A. in Experimental Psychology from the College of William & Mary and his doctorate in Clinical Psychology from the University of Alabama in August, 2007. He recently completed a clinical internship through the University of North Carolina—Chapel Hill, with a major rotation at the Federal Correctional Center in Butner, North Carolina. Since September, 2007, he has been working at Florida State Hospital conducting forensic evaluations. He also works part time with Stanley L. Brodsky, Ph.D. offering trial consultation services.

RALPH W. E. HOOD JR. is Professor of Psychology at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga. He is a former editor of the Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion and is currently a co-editor of the Archiv für religionspsychologie. He is a past president of division 36 (psychology of religion) of the Association Psychological and a recipient of the Phei Award from the Society for Religion and Science. of its William James award. He has authored over 200 articles in the psychology of religion and has authored, co-authored, or edited nine books.

Christine Kennedy is Vice President of Spiritual and Bereavement Care at Hospice of the Chesapeake and directs the Spiritual and Bereavement Care Center. The Center serves hospice patients and families, and offers bereavement and trauma counseling to adults, teens and children in the community who have experienced loss. She is a doctoral candidate in the Pastoral Counseling program at Loyola College in Maryland. She is a Maryland Licensed Clinical Professional Counselor and an ordained minister.

Gess LeBlanc, Ph.D. is Associate Professor in the Department of Educational Foundations and Counseling Programs at Hunter College, City University of New York. His research interests include the role of peer-based instruction in student learning, developing techniques for enhancing achievement motivation in children and adolescents, and culturally responsive pedagogy. Additionally, Dr. LeBlanc is a co-founder of Hunter’s Urban Center for Assessment, Research, and Evaluation (UCARE) and is currently engaged in a research project examining the role of spirituality of the development of culturally responsive pedagogy among elementary and high school teachers.

Michael J. Maher, Ph.D. has been a Catholic campus minister since 1990. Since 1996, he has served as a lay chaplain at Loyola University Chicago, where he also serves as part-time faculty in the School of Education. He is the author of The Educational Philosophy of the American Catholic Hierarchy in the Twentieth Century: An Analysis of Vatican Catholic High School: Beyond the Uniform (2005, Haworth Press), as well as numerous articles on the topics of service learning, the integration of research with faith, Catholic education, and GLBT issues.

Kevin S. Masters, Ph.D. is Associate Professor of Psychology and Director of Clinical Training at Syracuse University. His area of professional interest is clinical health psychology and he is specifically concerned about issues pertaining to religiosity/spirituality and health, in particular cardiovascular health. Dr. Masters is a Fellow of Division 35 (Health Psychology) of the American Psychological Association.
He is also Associate Editor of the Journal of Behavioral Medicine, editor of the Health Psychologist, and is Chari-elect of the Spirituality and Health Special Interest Group of the Society of Behavioral Medicine.

Lisa Miller, Ph.D. is current President of Division 36 and an Associate Professor of Psychology and Education at Teachers College, Columbia University. Dr. Miller studies spiritual experience and its protective qualities against morbidity in children and adolescents. The current study was funded by the William T. Grant Scholars Award ("Religion and Resilience in Adolescents;" Miller).

Mark Peyrot is a Professor in the Department of Sociology at Loyola College in Maryland. He was the founding Director of the Center for Social and Community Research at Loyola College in Maryland. His research focuses on community, professional, and personal responses to chronic disease (diabetes, mental illness, substance abuse). He is currently working with H. Lovell Smith on a longitudinal study of neighborhood organization responses to local drug abuse problems.

Shaun Pichler is a doctoral student at Michigan State University School of Labor & Industrial Relations and is an alumnus of Loyola University Chicago Graduate School of Business.