PART TWO

THE PROSOPOGRAPHICAL CATALOGUE
Aiolion (II) neoterōs of Phyla, son of Antipatros (II)

Testimonia: (i) IG II² 3242. (ii) ? IG II² 1733 l. 10.

Epigraphical Note: In (i) this Aiolion is identified as the archon [- - - -] τοῦ Ἀντιπατρού Φλυᾶς νεοτέρου (see entry no. 133 in the Epigraphical Catalogue); also in (ii) as ἐπὶ Αἰολίωνος νεοτέρου ἄρχων (as given in entry no. 18 in the Epigraphical Catalogue).

Status: Archon shortly after the turn of the century (and before A.D. 14), appearing eponymously (as restored) in the rededication of the Temple of Nemesis at Rhamnous to Thea Livia (i), during the hoplite generalship of Demostratos of Pallene (s.v.). Possibly also in a fragmentary catalogue of dikasteria supervisors (ii), dated to the beginning of the 1st c. A.D.

Family: Very likely to be the son of the well-known Augustan strategos Antipatros II of Phyla (s.v., with new stemma).

Alexandra, daughter of Leon of Cholleidai

LPGN ΠῚ Ἀλεξάνδρα (3). See now Follet (1976) 184, with new stemma. Previously, see Lewis (1955) 10 no. 14; cf. also Graindor (1931) 110 n. 7.

Testimonia: (i) IG II² 3155. (ii) IG II² 3516. (iii) IG II² 4341, 4342, 4343.

Status: Priestess of Athena Polias, now in the early decades of the 1st c. A.D. (reign of Tiberius; according to the new prosopography in Follet). As priestess Alexandra appears eponymously in various dedications to Athena Polias: an agonistic trophy (i); at least one argyrophoros dedication (ii), part of a commemorative trend in the late Augustan and Tiberian periods¹; and several fragmentary dedications of uncertain nature (iii).

¹On the brief revival of this type of dedication, see Geagan (1994) 171.

Family: According to Follet (1976) 184, with her marriage to Krateros of Paiania Alexandra married into the prominent family “the Flavii of Paiania”; with husband and sons Lysimachos & Krateros II attested
