

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Helen Bond is an Assistant Professor in the School of Education at Howard University in Washington, D.C. She earned a Bachelor of Science degree with Distinction in Education from Ohio State University, a Master of Arts degree from West Virginia University, and a Ph. D. in Human Development from Virginia Polytechnic and State University. She teaches courses in Social Foundations of Urban Education and Integrated Methods for Social Studies. Her primary research interests are peace education, the use of technology as an instrument of peace, and the study of genocide. She has completed a contribution to Jones, A. (Ed.). Evoking genocide titled You and I We Must change the World.

Tibbi Duboys is an Associate Professor in the School of Education at Brooklyn College of the City University of New York. She earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in Classics from Brooklyn College, an M.S. from Hunter College, and a Ph. D. in Counselor Education from Fordham University. She has taught undergraduate and graduate courses about the Holocaust, and is currently teaching student teachers. Her primary research interests involve the legacy of oppression in the lives of children, academic unionism and academic freedom. She is affiliated with Axe 6 of the Social Science laboratory at the Sorbonne. She has spoken widely about the Holocaust, and has published in journals. She contributed an entry, Should the Holocaust be Taught in Urban Schools? published in A Handbook of Urban Education (Praeger, 2006).

Lloyd Duck is an Associate Professor of Education at George Mason University in Fairfax, Virginia. He earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in history/music from the College of William and Mary, and an MAT degree and Ph.D. from the University of Virginia. He teaches graduate courses in Foundations of Education and in Social Studies methodology. His major research interests include teaching and learning styles, teacher retention, and character and moral education. He is the author of two books published by Chatelaine Press. He received the George Mason University Alumni Association's Distinguished Faculty Member of the Year Award in 2002.

Jesus Garcia is a Professor in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. He teaches undergraduate and graduate courses in social studies education and multicultural education. His research interests include his course work as well as the representation of diverse groups in textbooks. He is the co-author of American History published by McDougal Littell.

Jan LaBonty is a Professor at the University of Montana at Missoula. She earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in elementary education from the University of Montana, an M.Ed. in reading/language arts from Northern Montana College, as well as a Ph.D. from the University of Nebraska. She teaches courses in elementary language arts and reading at both undergraduate and graduate levels and graduate courses in Children's Literature. Her research interests include reading and writing methodology, poetry, and integrating literature into the curriculum. She has publicly spoken about the Holocaust, and published a paper subsequent to a professional conference.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Marian McKenna is Professor of Literacy Studies at the University of Montana. She earned a B.S. in Child Studies and Child Psychology from Purdue University. Her subsequent degrees, an M.A. and Ph. D. in Literacy Education and Cognitive Psychology were awarded by the University of Colorado at Boulder. She teaches Content Literacy Strategies, Social and Cultural Foundations of Literacy, and a graduate course in Young Adult Literature. Her current research interests involve academic service learning, and using young adult literature to teach concepts in the content areas. Her most recent publication (2007), Breaking Boundaries with Global Literature: Celebrating Diversity in K-12 Classrooms, was published by the International Reading Association.

Daryl Parks is an Assistant Professor of English Education in the Urban Teacher Program at Metropolitan State University in Minnesota. He received a Bachelor of Arts degree in English (summa cum laude), and subsequent degrees, M. A. in Education and a Ph.D. in Literacy from the University of Minnesota. He teaches courses in language and culture, urban education teaching methods, and reading and writing in urban secondary schools. His research interests are at the intersections of literacies, identities and teaching/learning. He is co-author of High school students' Competing Social Worlds: Negotiating identities and allegiances in response to Multicultural Literature published by Erlbaum.

Elizabeth Spalding is an Associate Professor in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction at the University of Nevada Las Vegas. Her Ph. D. was awarded by Indiana University-Bloomington. She teaches undergraduate and graduate courses in English Education and secondary education. Her research interests include the impact of cross-cultural experiences on pre-service and in-service teachers and the teaching of writing. Her most recent publication with E. Savage and J. Garcia is: The March of Remembrance and Hope: Teaching about diversity and social justice through the Holocaust. Teachers College Record, 109 (6), 1423-1456.

Karen Spector is an Assistant Professor at the University of Alabama who has studied and practiced critical English education in diverse educational settings. She earned a Bachelor of Arts in English, and an M.Ed. in English Education from the University of Florida. Her doctorate in Literacy was awarded by the University of Cincinnati. Her teaching and research interests include Holocaust literature, identity and critical literacy. Her dissertation concerned students reading Holocaust literature. She has published on students' religious responses to the Holocaust in Research in the Teaching