Aims & Scope
Method & Theory in the Study of Religion publishes articles, essays, notes, book reviews, and letters which explicitly address methodological and theoretical issues in the academic study of religion. In order to provide a forum for scholars to present their ideas to the larger critical community, the editors are interested particularly in papers and notes that respond directly to previous MTSR articles. Furthermore, the editor aims to promote the work of new scholars in the field. All submissions considered for publication are evaluated by at least two referees. The editor would like to acknowledge the support of the Department of Religion and the College of Arts & Sciences at Florida State University.
